Contents

Foreword 1

Chapter I
Christian Madras around 1890/1900 5
Madras as a Colonial Metropolis (5) – Transregional Press Centre (7) – Hindu Revival, City of Theosophists (8) – Forms of Christian Presence (9) – "Prospects of Christianity" around 1890 in a Missionary Perspective (13) – Indian Christians as a "Progressive Community" (14) Expectations of Indian Christians for the New Century (17)

Chapter II
The 'Christian Patriot'–The Journal 23
"What Do We Exist For?"–Programmatic Statements of the 'Christian Patriot' (23) – "Owned and Conducted Entirely by Members of the Native Christian Community" (25) – Management, Editors, Authors (27) – Reader, Circulation (29) – Distribution, Circulation (30) – Letters to the Editor – National and International (32) – Technical Aspects, Printing Modalities, Payment Behaviour (34) – Sources of Information (35) – Correspondents at Home and Abroad (36) – The 'Christian Patriot'–"the Oldest Christian Journal in India" (38) Press Controversies, Debates in the 'Christian Patriot' (39) – Hindu Press (40) – Missionary and Colonial Church Press (41) – Controversies Within the 'Indian Christian Community' (44) – The Formation of an 'Indigenous Christian Public Sphere'– India (44)

Chapter III
Indian Themes 49
Indians and Europeans, Paternalism and Racism (49) – Relationship with the Missionaries (51) – Dialectics of the "Three Selves" (53) – Controversies around an Indian Episcopate (58) "Native Ministry": Indigenous Pastors, Teachers and Catechists (63) – National Church Experiments: the 'National Church of India' (67) – Ecumenism: Missionary "Sectarianism" and Indian Initiatives (75) – Indian Christians and the National Movement (84) – Interreligious Relations (89) – Cultural Indigenisation of Indian Christianity (99) – Education, Progress, Modern Elites, "Mass Movements" (105) – Women, Female Education, Gender Issues (110) – Indian Christians in the Princely States (115) – Long Overlooked: The St. Thomas Christians (117) – Forms of Self-Organisation: The 'Madras Native Christian Association' (MNCA/MICA) (122) – Other Indian-Christian Organisations (127) – The 'National Missionary Society of India' (NMS) (130) – Expectations, the Mood around 1912 (135)

Chapter iv
International Perspectives–Overview 139
Sources (139) – Geographical Horizon of Newscovering (140) – Parallel but Time-Shifted Developments (141) – Topics (142) – Christianity as a Global Movement (143) – Hermeneutics of Missionary Newscovering (144) – "Three-Selves" as a Search Criterion for Role Models for India (145) – Regional Overview (146) – International Conferences (150)

Chapter v
International Perspectives–Specific Regions 153
West Africa: "Native Bishops" (153) – Uganda: Land of Martyrs, "Great Progress" towards Independence (155) – Japan: Western-Christian Modernity in Asian Appropriation (159) China: Boxer Uprising and Republican Turnaround (166) – Korea: "Spirit of Self-Help", Growth under Japanese Occupation (174) – South Africa: Black Christians and Indian Compatriots (177) – Armenia: Solidarity with the "Suffering Brothers in Faith" (184) – The Edinburgh 1910 World Missionary Conference in Indian Debates (188)

Chapter vi
From Cognitive Interaction to Direct Contacts and Transregional Networking 197
Levels of Contact (as Documented in the 'Christian Patriot') (197) – Diverse Forms of Contact and Networking (203) – Individual Transregional Networks (as Reflected in the 'Christian Patriot') (210) – The YMCA as a Pan-Asian Network (223) – Asian Connections, Beginnings of a Christian Pan-Asianism (227)

Chapter vii
Perspectives 233
The 'Christian Patriot' and the Concept of a 'Transregional Indigenous-Christian Public Sphere' (233) – Christian Internationalisms around 1910 (241) – The 'Christian Patriot' and the Program of a Polycentric History of World Christianity (248

Abbreviations (Organisations, Movements, Journals) 253

Sources 255

Bibliography 259